High Concept

Ex-Con Enforcer

Dante Lincoln, a Vegas bouncer and occasional mob muscle, just finished 36 months for conspiracy to commit robbery. He's determined to go straight. But nothing in Vegas ever goes as planned...

Trouble

In Debt To Joey Falcone

Everyone on the wrong side of the law in Vegas eventually works for Joey Falcone, but not many meet him personally. Dante Lincoln owes Falcone from way back, and Falcone isn't shy about calling in that marker. As long as Dante stays in Vegas, Falcone will be there--and Falcone always needs loyal men.

Background

That Big, Quiet Kid

Growing up in Henderson, Dante was always the tallest and strongest kid on the block, and never had to deal with bullies: his mere presence was enough to quell even the worst offenders. Like many big kids, he was gentle and shy.

As a teenager, Dante was even bigger, but the bullies got bigger too--and some of them got braver, and the worst of them became armed. At 17, four members of a local gang followed Dante home from school and began robbing his home. Three of them pulled him outside and began beating him.

Unfortunately for the bullies, and possibly unfortunately for Dante, a limousine passed by... and stopped. Joey Falcone, then a rising star in the underworld constellation of Las Vegas, had a soft spot for the underdog. He saved Dante's life, and paid for his hospital bills and rehab.

Rising Conflict

You Meet People In Prison

As an adult, Dante Lincoln began freelancing for Falcone. He was an minor operator in the world of Vegas crime, and his connection to Falcone was generally unknown--which left Dante well-placed to act as Falcone's eyes and ears at the street level. Dante worked all over the city, filling in wherever muscle was needed, and keeping Falcone informed about what was really going on with the men who did his dirty work.

But when Lincoln was arrested as part of a bank robbery gone sour, even Falcone's lawyers could only get the charge reduced to conspiracy. Dante was going down for hard time. A year and a half in prison is a long time... more than enough time to decide that you're in the wrong line of work.
